CASE STUDY

Ebola outbreak, safe goodbyes behind the shield

Tailored to your needs.
Built to your standards.

During the West African Ebola epidemic, grief collided with danger. Strict biosecurity rules meant families were denied access to their deceased loved ones. Traditional rituals - such as washing the body or saying goodbye face-to-face - were impossible.

In desperation, some communities began hiding bodies to conduct farewells in secret. But those rituals, done without protection, became deadly. Ebola spread further and more lives were lost, not just to the virus, but to the lack of safe alternatives.

To help address this, Polcreative Group developed a heavy-duty body bag with a transparent interior layer. This allowed loved ones to see the face of the deceased one last time without opening the bag and without risking exposure.

By combining biosecurity with dignity, this solution helped rebuild trust between aid workers and communities and allowed families a final moment of peace.

OUR STORY.

From family business to European expert.

In 2010, Herman van Loon founded Polcreative in a modest 350 m² workshop. Back then, 8 employees focused on a single goal: manufacturing quality body bags with care.

Today, we operate a 1,000 m² facility, employ over 45+ team members, and ship over 30,000 bags each month. 6 staff members have been with us from day one.

Under the leadership of Herman's daughter, Heidi van Loon, the next generation has continued the company's expansion with a clear focus: durability, professionalism, and responsibility.

WE'RE HERE
TO HELP, ALWAYS.

We understand the urgency of your work. That's why our team is available to advise, support and deliver, even under pressure.
